EXTRACTS. THE SILENT BATTLE.

The war that spring and winter wage, Goes on in silence day by day; Strong youth against decrupit old age, Now growth opposed to dark decay. The strile of hope against despair, Life against death; and morn by morn, A tenderswormth is in the air,

And richer bues and hopes are horn. And lo! on every side appears The harrying host of spring's advance, The crowding grass, with bristling spears, The brookside rushes' ready lance. The jayelins of daring reeds, ... The iris-sprout's keen bayonet thrust,

With rank and file of sturdy weeds Rising exultant from the dust. Each day a fresher guerden flaunts, Marking the vantage ground by turns; The arrow heads of water plants,

The hard elenched fists of valiant ferns. The willow pennous, heave and fair, The wilding's sharp and tender blade, With every force on earth and air Join boldly in the glad erusade. Till winter's sullen struggles conso, And cold and darkness fall and floe, And all the hills are fair with peace. And green with palms of victory.
